[1]The remote patient monitoring field is a rapidly growing one given the advantages it offers for home healthcare, remote regions, and elderly care. However, with it comes a long list of considerations and critical issues for designers and engineers to keep in mind. The cover story [2] examines this area.

The extrusion of medical tubing can be a relatively "simple" task or it can present a number of challenges; it all depends on the application, materials to be used, etc. This article [3] focuses on single lumen tubing and take a walk through a selection of the options available.

"The Symphony of Surgical Robotics [4]" looks at what engineers need to understand regarding the motion control technology that makes surgical robots function.

"Designing Micro Parts with High Volume Production in Mind [5]" highlights the advantages of stamping for medical device component fabrication as an alternative to molding or machining.
