CEOs, business executives and investors came together to gain insights into industry trends, discuss public policy and share best practices. Attendees heard from the very leaders shaping critical policy decisions including FDA Commissioner Margaret Hamburg, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Administrator Donald Berwick, U.S. Secretary of Commerce Gary Locke and Rep. Erik Paulsen (R-MN). The keynote address was provided by noted TV news anchor and cancer research advocate, Katie Couric, who spoke about the importance of medical technology in her own family's experience with colorectal and pancreatic cancers.

"We are pleased the conference has steadily grown, seeing a 17 percent increase in attendance from last year. This growth is a reflection of the diversity seen in the types of panels and speakers as well as the opportunities to connect with leaders in our industry, at companies large and small," said James V. Mazzo, president of Abbott Medical Optics and board chairman of AdvaMed.

During the conference more than 782 one-on-one busines
