DALLAS, Oct. 5 /PRNewswire/ -- North American Spine is pleased to announce a new partnership with University General Hospital in Houston, TX to bring back pain relief to Houston patients. Starting in October, Houston doctors specially trained by North American Spine will perform the revolutionary AccuraScope™ Procedure [1] to diagnose and treat lumbar back pain. Currently, doctors trained by North American Spine are located in Dallas, TX.

University General Hospital is a physician-owned, 72-bed acute care hospital designed to suit the most exacting requirements of superb, state-of-the-art medical treatment. University General Hospital offers the highest level of service, is competitively priced and is more affordable than most other hospitals.

"North American Spine is excited to be expanding into an important new market with a high caliber partner, University General Hospital," said Chris Lloyd, CEO of North American Spine. "UGH will be instrumental in bringing our exciting medical advancements to the greater Houston community."

In addition to the Houston market, North American Spine plans to expand its elite group of hand-selected specialists and Partner Hospitals in select worldwide markets including the New York/New Jersey metro area as well as Southern California in late 2010.
