The major drivers of this market are growth in acceptance of minimally invasive surgical procedures as a viable substitute for hysterectomy, increase in the prevalence of gynecological conditions, growth in women's preference for more innovative and effective gynecological procedures, rise in the global healthcare expenditure and the aging baby boomer population. On the other hand, lack of capital availability to small manufacturers and delays in the approval procedures in North America are expected to hold back the growth of this market.

Rise in the prevalence of menorrhagia has resulted in growth in demand for endometrial ablation procedures. The new second generation endometrial ablation devices are safe, minimally invasive and less time consuming in nature.
