The FDA solicits candidates for medical device industry representatives to join the Center for Devices & Radiological Health's Device Good Manufacturing Practice Advisory Committee.

The FDA is seeking written recommendations for candidates to sit on the Center for Devices & Radiological Health's Device Good Manufacturing Practice Advisory Committee, according to a note in the Federal Register.

The federal watchdog agency asked for written recommendations of medical device industry representatives who will hold a non-voting seat on the DGMPAC, a committee tasked with reviewing proposed regulations and making recommendations on medical device manufacturing practices.
