The Associated Press

THE WOODLANDS, Texas--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Jan 25, 2013--McKesson Specialty Health and The US Oncology Network today announced that Marcus Neubauer, M.D., has accepted the position of medical director, Oncology Services for McKesson Specialty Health, effective March 1. In his new role, Dr. Neubauer will use his extensive medical experience to continue his work on pathways development. Specifically, he will serve as the primary medical liaison between physicians in The US Oncology Network and physicians and executives within the National Comprehensive Cancer Network ® (NCCN ®). This includes ensuring that the recently announced Value Pathways powered by NCCN are 100% concordant with NCCN Clinical Practice Guidelines in Oncology (NCCN Guidelines ®) and that they are well integrated in a first-of-its-kind clinical quality and regimen support system—an important step in ensuring patients receive the highest quality treatment while offering options to address costs of cancer care.

“I am excited about this new role and the important work we plan to do together with the physicians and executives at NCCN,” said Dr. Neubauer. “Continuing our work with pathways, personalized medicine, and advanced molecular diagnostics is crucial to improving quality and addressing the rising cost of cancer care.” Dr. Neubauer has been heavily involved in The US Oncology Network for more than 15 years. He serves as chair of The US Oncology Network Pathways Task Force, sits on the editorial board of the Journal of Oncology Practice, and most recently served as an oncologist with Kansas City Cancer Center. He has been published more than 20 times and is a member of the American Society of Clinical Oncology (ASCO). Dr. Neubauer is board certified in Internal Medicine and Medical Oncology.

“Dr. Neubauer is a respected and impressive physician who is committed to advancing the quality and science of cancer care,” said Roy Beveridge, M.D., chief medical officer for McKesson Specialty Health and The US Oncology Network. “With more than two decades of medical experience and his intimate knowledge of pathways, diagnostics and community-based patient care, he is the perfect fit for this position. I look forward to the progress he will make in these areas.” Dr. Neubauer will serve as the physician lead for the suite of payer-facing solutions delivered to oncology providers, and will support the development and marketing of quality solutions and programs to providers, payers and employers.
