California company Gynesonics lands a $21 million Series D funding round in support of its VizAblate ultrasound-guided uterine fibroid ablation system.

Women's health devices maker Gynesonics landed $21 million in new financing in support of its ultrasound-guided uterine fibroid ablation system, the company announced today.

The California company plans to use the funds to further clinical and commercial progress for its VizAblate system, a minimally invasive method for treating uterine fibroids and an alternative to hysterectomy.
