

Medical Device Company Trends: Medtech Workers Paid Better than Peers, According to Feds

Mass Device

Newly released figures from the Bureau of Labor & Statistics show that medical device company employees are higher paid than their counterparts in other industries, especially at the highest levels.

Workers in the Medical device industry earn, in general, higher salaries than their counterparts across American business, according figures recently released by the Federal Bureau of Labor & Statistics.

The good news for medtech starts at the top, where executives and top line managers earn an annual mean salary of $139,620, about 21% higher than their counterparts in business who earn $114,850 on average.
